Being a college student is already a challenging and stressful experience. Now imagine navigating that journey while also maintaining your sobriety. For students in recovery, the pressures and temptations of college life can be overwhelming.

That's where the Robert Alexander Center comes in – a unique organization dedicated to supporting college students in recovery through their tailored approach. Here we will explore the challenges faced by college students in recovery and how treatment empowers them to thrive.

The Challenges of Being a College Student in Recovery

College life is full of academic demands, social situations, and various stressors – all of which can be particularly challenging for students in recovery. The constant pressure to perform academically and the temptation to engage in substance use can be a dangerous combination. Moreover, students in recovery may also face stigma and a lack of understanding from their peers and faculty, making it even more challenging to balance their recovery with college responsibilities.

Robert Alexander Center's Tailored Approach

A comprehensive program addresses not only academic needs but also provides crucial resources and assistance for their recovery.

Supportive Living Environment

At Robert Alexander Center, students have access to dedicated sober living spaces where they can live with others who are also in recovery. These living arrangements foster a sense of community and belonging, where students can find support and accountability from their peers. This supportive living environment plays a crucial role in helping students stay on track with their recovery while pursuing their academic goals.

Academic Support

RAC also offers academic support to help students excel in their studies while managing their recovery. This includes tutoring, study groups, and assistance with course selection and planning. The center also collaborates with faculty to ensure student's needs are met and accommodations are provided, if necessary.

Recovery Programming

Regular 12-step meetings and support groups are integral parts of the recovery programming. In addition, students have access to individual therapy and counseling services to address any personal challenges they may face. Workshops on topics such as relapse prevention, stress management, and life skills are also available to equip students with essential tools for their recovery journey.

Social and Recreational Activities

RAC knows the importance of building a balanced and fulfilling college experience. That's why they offer sober events and outings for students to partake in, providing opportunities to build friendships and connections with peers in recovery. These social and recreational activities promote a healthy lifestyle and support students' overall well-being.

Alumni Network and Mentorship

The center also provides students with the opportunity to connect with alumni in recovery, offering a sense of long-term community and belonging. Alumni can serve as mentors, providing guidance, support, and inspiration for current students on their journey.
