Addiction can turn anyone's life upside down. It can wreak havoc in your personal life, affecting both family and friendships, and also devastate your work life. The secrecy, shame, and guilt can wear you down, affecting your mental and psychological health while addiction destroys your body. While addiction is a disease like any other, it is unfortunately misunderstood by many. This means that those struggling with it end up being stigmatized, leaving them lonely and isolated when what they need most is a helping hand and support to overcome their addiction.

Once you get past the denial stage and decide that you have a problem, the next step is seeking out appropriate treatment to help you get sober. Deciding to attend rehab is one of the best things you can do because no matter what anyone says, you can't beat addiction on your own. However, with the right assistance, you can conquer addiction and get your life back on track.

Choosing to seek addiction treatment may be hard but it is a step in the right direction. If you are a resident of Kentucky looking for a rehab facility, you have two options. You can choose to attend a local drug treatment facility or travel to another state for addiction treatment. The right decision for you depends on your needs and financial situation. Both options have their pros and cons that have to be carefully weighed and considered before making your final choice.

Addiction Treatment In Kentucky

Starting your search for a drug and alcohol treatment center in Kentucky makes sense for various reasons. Maybe you can't get time off work to attend rehab and have to work it into your schedule. Or perhaps you have other obligations such as school, taking care of kids, or elderly parents that can't be neglected. Alternatively, maybe your insurance only allows you to seek drug treatment services in Kentucky. Regardless of the reason, you find yourself considering a rehab center that is closer to home.

Many benefits make Kentucky a great addiction treatment location for local residents. These include the following:

1. It is less expensive.

It will be less costly to seek out local treatment compared to traveling to another state for rehab. You'll get to save money on hotel accommodation, airfare, and transport. This makes local rehab an affordable option for those who are concerned about their finances. It should be noted, however, that there are ways to raise money if you really need to travel for addiction treatment.

2. You remain close to your social support system.

One huge disadvantage of traveling for rehab is that it takes you away from your family and friends. Your loved ones are a crucial source of support when undergoing treatment for drug and alcohol addiction. They can encourage, motivate and inspire you to keep going when things get tough. If you travel for rehab, it can be difficult for them to visit or provide their support.

3. You don't put your life on hold.

Sticking with a local treatment center gives you the option to work your treatment plan into your schedule. Treatment centers such as the Robert Alexander Center for Recovery provide flexible treatment plans so that those who need treatment can fit them into their schedule. If you still have to attend school or go to work, an outpatient treatment program may be ideal for you so you can continue receiving the treatment you need without putting your life on hold.

4. You can visit the facility first to ensure it's the right fit for you.

Another great advantage of choosing to get addiction treatment locally in Kentucky is that you can visit the treatment facility beforehand to ensure that it suits you. This allows you to check things out, ask about different treatment plans such as detoxification services, and chat with some members of staff. This helps save you a lot of trouble as you'll get to determine if you're comfortable enough spending time there or not.

5. There's a better aftercare transition.

When you attend an out-of-state rehab center, it can be difficult for the treatment specialists to set up a comprehensive aftercare plan for you once you're discharged. This isn't a problem if you attend a local addiction treatment facility here in Kentucky. The treatment specialists at the Robert Alexander Center have the right resources and they will be able to refer you to the right support groups, sober living communities, etc. in the community.

6. It's easier to make arrangements for kids and pets.

Traveling for rehab can present a problem especially if you have kids or pets. It can be hard to find someone willing to look after them for the duration of your treatment. Depending on their age, it might not be feasible to leave your children with other people. That's why local rehab treatment is a great option if you have kids and pets. Some treatment programs such as the intensive outpatient program allow you to attend treatment sessions either in the morning or evening then go back to living your life.

7. Your family can participate in the therapy.

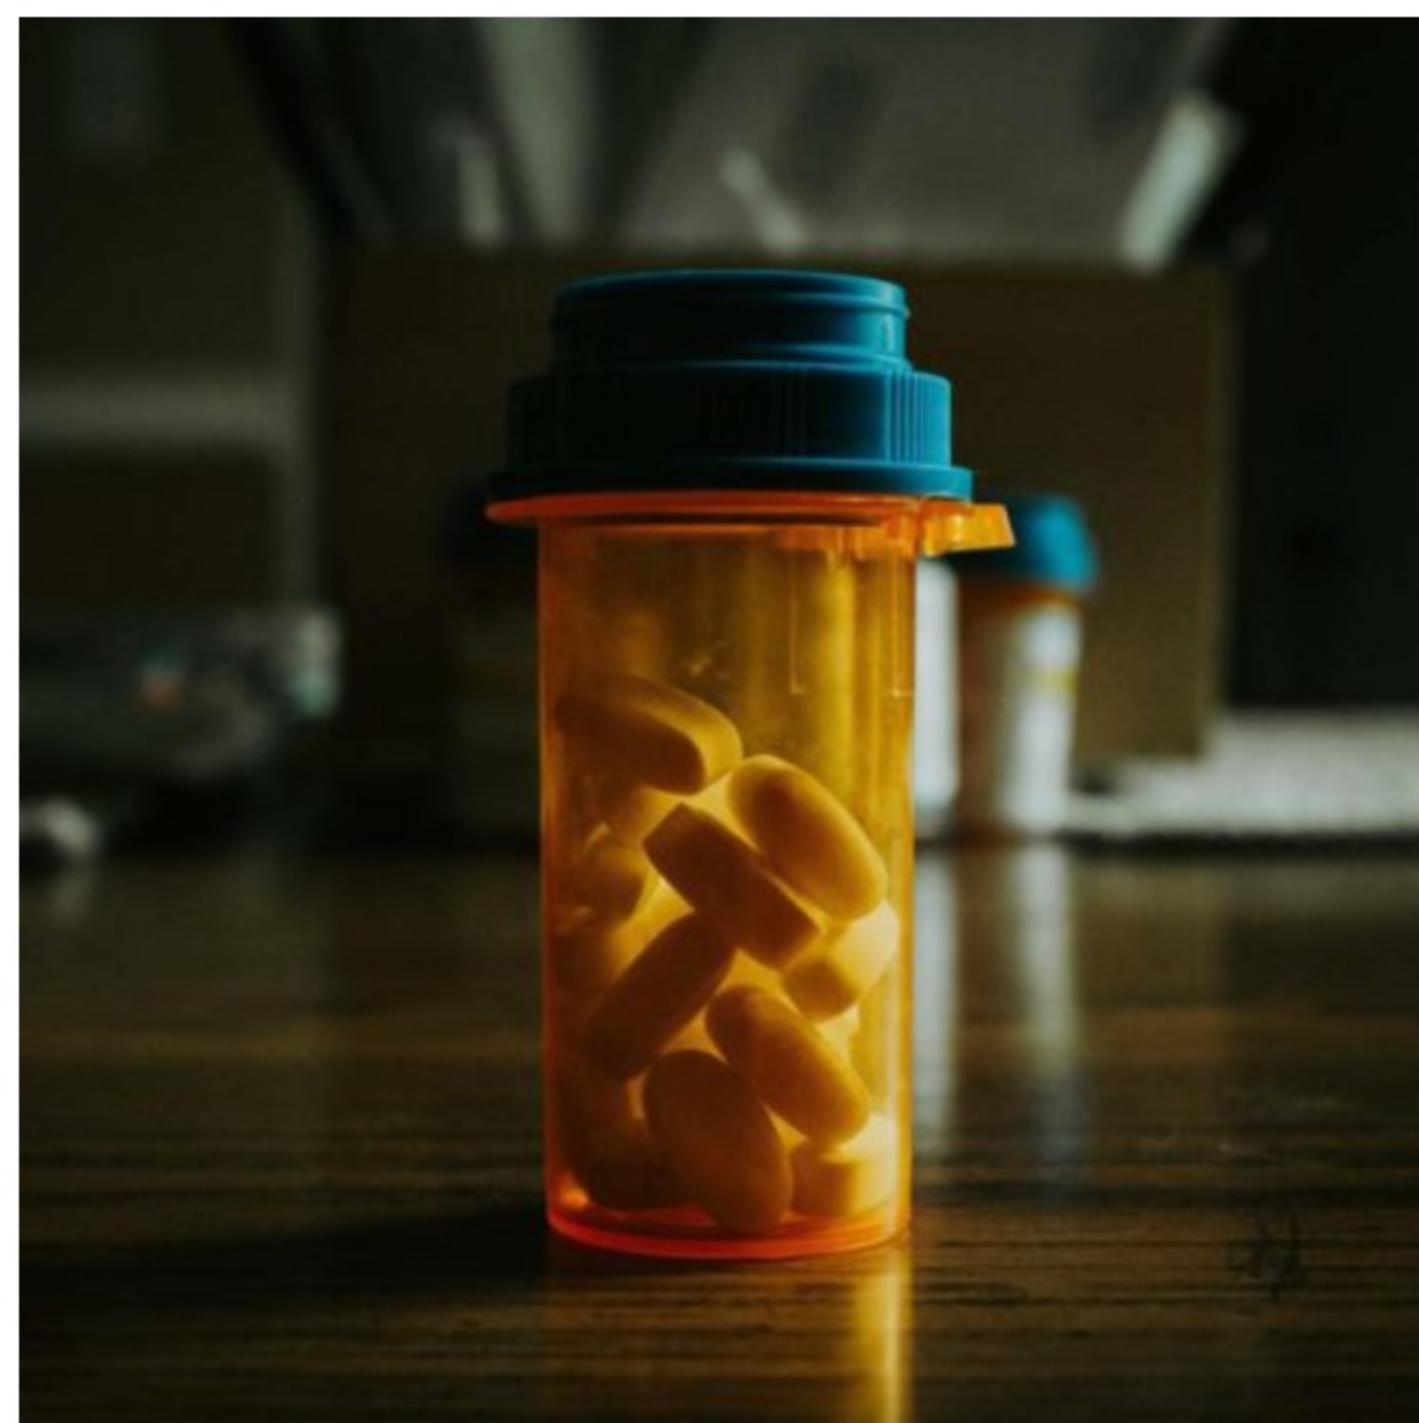

Another huge advantage of opting to attend rehab in Kentucky as a resident is that your family can also participate in the treatment. Addiction affects the whole family and that's why we have the family therapy program. This helps families to understand how addiction affects them as well as equip them with the tools they need to repair and improve their relationship.
