

Dangers Of Detoxing From Heroin Without An Addiction Treatment Center

by Robert Alexander Center | Jul 13, 2022 | Blog | 0 comments

When addicts try to detox from heroin without professional help, they are putting themselves in serious danger. Without medical supervision, detoxing from heroin can be life-threatening.

Here are some of the dangers associated with detoxing from heroin without professional help: Seizures

One of the most serious dangers of detoxing from heroin without professional help is that addicts can experience seizures. These seizures can be caused by withdrawal symptoms or by using contaminated drugs. Either way, they can be deadly.

Dehydration

Another serious danger of detoxing from heroin without professional help is dehydration. This is because vomiting and diarrhea are common side effects of withdrawal, and they can lead to severe dehydration if not treated properly.

Malnutrition

Malnutrition is also a serious danger of detoxing from heroin without professional help. This is because addicts often lose their appetite when they are withdrawing from heroin, and they can quickly become malnourished if they don't eat properly.

Infections

Another danger of detoxing from heroin without professional help is that addicts can develop infections. This is because heroin use often leads to skin infections, and these can become serious if they are not treated properly.

Depression

Depression is another danger of detoxing from heroin without professional help. This is because withdrawal can be a very emotionally trying time, and addicts who don't have professional help to deal with their depression can be in serious danger.

If you or someone you know is considering detoxing from heroin, it is important to get professional help. The dangers of detoxing from heroin without professional help are just too great.
